Dear diary

You can trust your diary – it won't tell your secrets and feelings!

Dear diary,

what a day! We wrote a class test in geography today. When I woke up this morning, I was really confident<sup>1</sup> because I studied a lot last week. Right before the test I got a little nervous – as I always do. When my teacher handed me the test, I was totally surprised about the task. I had no idea what to write down! At first I thought that we had not discussed this topic in class and I got angry with my teacher. But when I saw that all the others had started writing, I got confused<sup>2</sup>. Then I remembered that I had been sick a few weeks ago. I missed a geography lesson, but I was too bored by the task and so I didn't catch up on<sup>3</sup> what they had done. I got so annoyed<sup>4</sup> with myself! Why did I not listen carefully? Well, it was too late at that point ...

Anyway, I had to pass this test<sup>5</sup>. And the only way I could do this was by copying my neighbour's test. At first it went really well because my teacher did not watch us. But suddenly he came to my desk. I tell you, I was frightened<sup>6</sup>! I thought he had noticed I was cheating<sup>7</sup>. But he didn't say a word and simply walked on. However, he went back to his desk and watched me closely. So I was too scared to cheat again. After the test, I was thankful for my friend's help, but also a little worried. What if my teacher notices that our results<sup>8</sup> are almost the same? I hope we will not get into trouble. Somehow I feel guilty about cheating. I know I shouldn't have done it. But I was so frustrated because I had studied so much and only missed this one part.

Well, I am glad that this long day is over now. Hopefully tomorrow will be a better day.

Good night,
Jenny
