Lily is a secretary in a big hospital in Dallas, Texas. Lily comes from Maine and has only been in Dallas for three months. The doctors at the hospital dictate their reports and then give the audio cassettes to a secretary. The secretaries listen to the cassettes and type the reports.

Lily finds the job difficult. People in Texas speak differently than people in Maine and many of the medical terms are very long and difficult. Lily must listen carefully and she often has to look a word up in a big medical dictionary on her computer.

One day she was typing a report when she heard a very difficult word. She listened very carefully. The sentence was "This man has pholenfrometry." Lily didn't know the word and she wasn't sure how to spell it. She looked in the big medical dictionary, but the word wasn't there. She asked all the other secretaries, but none of them knew what 'pholenfrometry' was.

So Lily had to ask the doctor. He listened to his report. And then he listened again. "Like I said, 'This man has pholenfrometry,'" he told Lily. "So what's the big problem with that?" "Yes, but what is 'pholenfrometry'?" Lily asked him. The doctor looked puzzled. Then he smiled. "Ah! You're from the East Coast." He took out his pen and wrote something on a notepad and gave it to Lily. She read: "This man has fallen from a tree."
